SUNDANCE

The one- or two-player video which features unparalleled action. Players open "space hatches" which catch bouncing suns upon the screen. Player options include the use of two, three, or four suns, and the expert players can not only fire a "nova" out of the hatches, thus destroying the suns, he can also remove the optional grids for increased competition and excitement. All options can be manipulated by the player during play, thus increasing the action as well as operator collections.

Cinematronics' SUNDANCE introduces a new feature of the Vectorbeam monitor. 16 different levels of line intensity have been introduced into the system, thus creating a magnificent display. A 23" monitor has also been introduced, leading to an even greater display of a great new concept.

SUNDANCE includes six great sounds to mystify the players and attract even more action. Explosions, whooshes, vacuum operated hatches, pings and bongs surround the player or players.

Scoring is achieved in SUNDANCE by opening the hatches to catch the bouncing suns, or firing "novas" (a super intensified ball of fire) at the suns and destroying them. A flickering sun will randomly appear on the screen. Catching it gives the player five points, while the ordinary suns give one point. When a bonus is reached, the player receives 100 points and the entire display "explodes", rivaling the best Fourth of July fireworks display on record. When bonus is reached four times, the person receives extra time based on operator settings. The game itself may be set for 45 seconds, one minute, one and a half minutes, or two minutes playtime per quarter.

SUNDANCE includes Cinematronics' coin accumulator for added playtime, which means added collections to the operator. It is operated by a one coin per player minimum, which allows for double profits in two-player action.

Language options include Japanese and English in an operator controlled switch.
